

I would say that it definitely prepares you for researching and you learn a lot. I've had other classes that have been more challenging, however, I feel like I've learned the most from this one.

I would describe it as a fun class, where you learned to research and it would be very helpful for other classes that you are taking. Of course I would recommend it.. I loved it!

I would most definitely recommend this class to a friend, because it is (1) an easy 3-credit class (2) you learn how to use the UW databases and sharpen your researching skills. I would tell them about the character project and also about the use of UW databases in order to research better.

If someone asked me about this class i would tell them that this class is a good way to learn how to do library research. It opens the door to all the resources that are available to you and how you use them. Yes i would recommend this class. I am not trying to be nice when i say this, but this class is probably one of the best classes i have taken here at the U. The work load was managable and i learned things that are going to be useful not only in the near future but later in life.

I would tell my friend that this class requires a lot of time spent in the library but that it really helps you learn how to research effectively and find varioius materials. I would tell her that this class is awesome if you are planning to go into a field in which research is necessary or you are going to take classes that require research. I would definitely recommend this class.

I would recommend this class. I would tell them that they would receive a character from a certain time period and would have to research at least 2 large events in their life. I would tell them that it is a lot of work, but really neat to learn about history this way.

Basically this class is about teaching you how to research. It's taught by a pair of librarians who know their stuff better than anyone. They get you involved in the class's main research project by assigning everyone a fictious world war I character, who life you follow with research.

I would definitely reccomend the class. I would describe it as a fun class where you get assigned a fictional character, roll dice to determine what events happen in his life, and put together a project about him.

I would say the class is a really good way to get to know the library. I came in knowing hardly anything about the library, but now I feel pretty comfortable and confident looking for material. I would defintely reccomend it because I enjoyed it, but if the student I was talking to had extensive knowledge of the library already I would think it was review for them.

I would deffinatly recommend this class to a friend. I would say that the activities involved the class, while not terribly time consuming, do take some effort but along with researching your subject you are also learning how to research. So it's really 2 courses for the price of one. If my frineds already knew how to research things i would say this class is well thought and all you need to do is create characters based on your research

A fresh way of learning about methods of research. It should be a requirement for anyone in the liberal arts schools.

I would tell him or her that this is one of the best classes I have ever taken and they must take it too. Honestly I did not know how to use a library before this class, but being the serious student that I am, I feel it has completely changed my life for the better!

I would tell them that it is a very interactive class geared towards learning how to research. If they were starting off at UW or hadn't quite figured out how to use the searching systems, I would recommend it without any hesitation.

I would describe the class as a great tool for the rest of college. Already I have helped friends reasearching for a class with the skills I have learned. I would strongly recommend the class.

I would describe it as necessary before getting to far into classes at the UofW. In that, I mean it is very useful for researching other topic for other classes and papers. If you take it near the end of your career at the U, one may feel it was useful, but maybe it could have been taken at an earlier point of my education ...

Basically, I would DEFINITELY recommend it, but either freshman or sophmore year, at the latest junior because it is useful in all studies ...

Researching in the Library, how to use the sources in the Library. Finding information that normally wouldnt be searched for.
